Open-air rooms. These are architectures that do not need time and go far beyond the dangerous folds of history. These are the architectures to flood the Mediterranean Sea with. These are the tic snobs of the terrible twentieth century. It is that intersection between art architecture and the border that no one has ever inquired about. An exhibition and a book reveal the secrets. Do not miss a great opportunity!

The Architect Kuno Mayr has developed a way of working on reality in which the rigorousness of his process manifests itself first in the model. Through a long and laborious procedure, overlooked things are saved from abandonment and neglect so as to reappear transfigured and ennobled as works of architecture.
